Managing and Leading in Inter-agency Settings (second edition)

In a climate of national and international health and social care reform, there is increased emphasis on the role of partnership working across public, private and third-sector services.

While greater integration of services brings multiple benefits for managers and leaders, partnership working can prove challenging for managers and leaders who have been charged with working alongside other agencies and professions.

As part of a series of resources designed to offer practical support for those working in the health and social care arena, this short but comprehensive text offers an insight into some of the challenges of leading and managing collaborative practice.

The authors focus on current policy trends, research and key issues encountered by leaders and managers in interagency settings.

They identify frameworks and concepts that can be applied to help support more effective leadership and management in the context of joint working.

The book provides a succinct summary of recommendations necessary for policy and practice when navigating the challenges of achieving interagency collaboration.

This pocket-size text is a useful reference source for all professionals responsible for health and social care delivery.

Reviewed by Annabella S Gloster, senior lecturer and programme leader advanced practice, University of Salford

Disaster Health Management: A Primer for Students and Practitioners

This comprehensive textbook addresses the history of disaster management, terminology, concepts, principles and trends. While the book refers mainly to Australian policies and guidelines, international examples are offered too.

The authors discuss disaster management systems and the advantages and disadvantages of social media. The final section covers strategic considerations, leadership, preparation, resilience and incident management.

Reviewed by Annabella S Gloster, senior lecturer and programme leader advanced practice, University of Salford

Aromatherapy, Massage and Relaxation in Cancer Care

As a devotee of complementary therapies, I loved this book. It offers an overview of how three complementary therapies integrate with modern healthcare, and will be useful for anyone who wants to learn about the therapies available, how they work, their evidence base and how they can be incorporated into NHS treatment.

This book offers advice on governance issues, infection control, such as whether a therapist should wear gloves when performing a massage, documentation and confidentiality.

There is also a detailed explanation of how aromatherapy and massage work. Much of the application focuses on symptom management, palliative and end of life care.

I recommend this book to anyone involved in cancer care and management.

Reviewed by Nicola James, prostate cancer nurse consultant, Morriston Hospital, Swansea

Managing and Leading in Inter-agency Settings

In a climate of national and international health and social care reform, there is increased emphasis on the role of partnership working across public, private and third-sector services.

While greater integration of services brings multiple benefits for managers and leaders, partnership working can prove challenging for managers and leaders who have been charged with working alongside other agencies and professions.

As part of a series of resources designed to offer practical support for those working in the health and social care arena, this short but comprehensive text offers an insight into some of the challenges of leading and managing collaborative practice.

The authors focus on current policy trends, research and key issues encountered by leaders and managers in interagency settings.

They identify frameworks and concepts that can be applied to help support more effective leadership and management in the context of joint working.

The book provides a succinct summary of recommendations necessary for policy and practice when navigating the challenges of achieving interagency collaboration.

This pocket-size text is a useful reference source for all professionals responsible for health and social care delivery.

Reviewed by Annabella S Gloster, senior lecturer and programme leader advanced practice, University of Salford

Disaster Health Management: A Primer for Students and Practitioners

This comprehensive textbook addresses the history of disaster management, terminology, concepts, principles and trends. While the book refers mainly to Australian policies and guidelines, international examples are offered too.

The authors discuss disaster management systems and the advantages and disadvantages of social media. The final section covers strategic considerations, leadership, preparation, resilience and incident management.

Reviewed by Annabella S Gloster, senior lecturer and programme leader advanced practice, University of Salford

Aromatherapy, Massage and Relaxation in Cancer Care

As a devotee of complementary therapies, I loved this book. It offers an overview of how three complementary therapies integrate with modern healthcare, and will be useful for anyone who wants to learn about the therapies available, how they work, their evidence base and how they can be incorporated into NHS treatment.

This book offers advice on governance issues, infection control, such as whether a therapist should wear gloves when performing a massage, documentation and confidentiality.

There is also a detailed explanation of how aromatherapy and massage work. Much of the application focuses on symptom management, palliative and end of life care.

I recommend this book to anyone involved in cancer care and management.

Reviewed by Nicola James, prostate cancer nurse consultant, Morriston Hospital, Swansea